Don't forget this month is your last chance to go into our draw to win 'A Romantic Escape for Two to Fiji'. The boss is away and we have some fantastic special offers just for you, but you must promise not to tell her when she gets back Shhh!

We also thought we might give you the dirt on Sodium Laurel Sulphate, boy is he a baddie, but we will let you make your own mind up on that one.

A lot of us suffer with some form of pigmentation or dark pigmented marks on our face, neck or décolletage so we thought we might share our knowledge about CircuitSkin's Brilliance Serum.

What's so bad about Sodium Laurel Sulphate??? It's in everything!

Well, for starters, Sodium Laurel Sulphate (SLS) denatures protein (skin and hair is made up of protein). It is also a mutagen. This means that it is capable of changing the information in genetic material found in cells. It is also an eye irritant. One study to determine the effect of SLS in the eye found that SLS is rapidly taken up and accumulated by eye tissues and retained for up to five days (which is particularly harmful to the developing eyes of young children - and I thought it was just about tears!). It was also found to cause changes in some proteins of eye tissues and it can extend the healing time in injured eyes. SLS can damage the outer layer of skin, causing dryness, roughness, scaliness, fissuring and loss of flexibility, and can reduce the barrier function of normal healthy skin. Sodium Laurel Sulphate is also a comedogenic. Sircuit® products contain No SLS.
